

Research Intern: June 5-July 29, 2017

Stipend: $1800

Hours: Part-Time (20 hours/week), some evenings and Saturdays required

Threewalls transitioned from a bricks-and-mortar gallery to an itinerant model in early 2016 in response to contemporary discourse about the intersections of art, social justice and community. We continue to support artists and collaborative projects, especially those which are best presented outside of traditional art spaces, thereby expanding the discourse around contemporary art presentation and exhibition, and breaking down walls to contemporary art that are firmly in place in so many communities.

Threewalls seeks a summer intern to assist with research projects, specifically on performance art and Chicago neighborhoods, in addition to program research. We are looking for candidates with global knowledge of contemporary art, experience with the intersections of art and community, and a strong interest and involvement with social justice issues particularly around race, ethnicity, inclusion and equity. Additionally, excellent research, writing, and communication skills are necessary; and the ability to work independently.
